

FORKLIFT SAFETY

Forklifts, also called powered industrial trucks, help us perform essential tasks, but they are also quite dangerous. Driving a forklift is a serious responsibility and should not be taken lightly. Forklift drivers at must be properly trained and follow all safety procedures and precautions.

Keep Safety in Mind

In order to ensure your safety and the safety of everyone in our workplace, it is important that all forklift drivers operate their machinery responsibly and with safety in mind. Driving a forklift is a serious responsibility and should not be taken lightly.

Here are the top 5 things you need to know about forklift safety:

1. Pre-trip inspection

Each day, check that the truck is ready for the day's work and perform any necessary maintenance before operating.

Report any malfunction or poor performance to your supervisor immediately.

2. Safe driving-Part 1

Always make sure your driving path is clear. Slow down for corners, blind spots and doorways. Drive defensively by always being aware of your surrounding and watching for the unexpected. Never try to turn on an incline. Cross tracks diagonally and slow down for uneven surfaces.

3. Safe driving-Part 2

Keeps legs, arms, feet, hands and head inside the truck. Always give those on foot the right of way. Stay out from under forks and loads. Never show off or use the machine for anything other than your specified job tasks. Never give anyone a ride.

4. Loading-Part 1

Use reverse when going down inclines and go forward up inclines. Do not travel with the load elevated, and keep the load stable and as close to the floor as possible. Avoid raising or lowering a load while the truck is moving.

5. Loading-Part 2

Always keep the load tilted back towards the carriage while raising and lowering. Make sure the load is balanced and is within the capacity of the truck. Never use the forks as a personnel elevator unless properly equipped.

Discussion

1. What do you look for during the pre-trip inspection?

2. Can anyone share an experience relating to this topic?
